Little Bitches.

BY JOHN HAY.
I don't go much on religion,
I never 'aint had no show,
But I've got a middlin' tight grip, sir,
On the handful of things I know.
I don't pan out on the prophets,
And free-will, and that sort of thing,
But I believe in God and the angels
Ever since one night last spring.
I come into town with some turnips,
And my little Gabe came along,
No four-year-old in the country
Could beat him for pretty and strong.
Pearl and chipper and sassy;
Always ready to swear and brag,
And I'd learnt him to chew tobacco
Just to keep his milk teeth white.

The snow come down like a blanket,
As I passed by Taggart's store,
I went in for a jug of molasses,
And left the team at the door.
They sneaked at something and started
I heard one little squall
And hell to split over the prairie
Went team, little bitches and all.
Hell to split over the prairie;
I was almost froze with sneer,
But we roused up some torches,
And searched for 'em far and near
At last we struck horses and wagon
Snowed under a soft white mound,
I spot, dead beat, but of little Gabe
No hide nor hair was found.

And here all hope soured on me
Of help from my fellow-critters aid,
I just dozed down on my marrow-bones
Crotch-deep in the snow and prayed.
By this the torches was played out
And me and Israel Pare
Went off for some wood to a sheepfold
That he said was some-where there.
We found it at last, a little shed
Where they shut up the lambs at night,
We looked in and seen them huddled there,
So warm and sleepy and white.
And there, so little bitches and chirped
As part as ever you see:
"I want a chew of tobacco
And that's what's the matter of me."

How did he get that? Angels,
He could never have walked in that storm.
They just scooped down and toted him
To where it was safe and warm,
And I think that sawin' a little child
And bring him to his own
Is a darned sight better business
Than loafin' around the throne.

The Leadville Democrat contains the following account of an accident to a surveying party in the Black Canyon. The party organized at South Arkansas, Colorado. Clay Burgess and Will Mason of Leadville were employed as chainmen. Mr. Burgess tells the following story:

He said that no one who had not visited the country could understand its extreme ruggedness, and in following up the route they found the dark caverns of Black Canyon in their path. Some time was devoted to an effort to avoid going through this canyon, but it was found to be as easy as any other portion of the country. Accordingly they went to work, and for hundreds of feet they were compelled to descend in a basket that was prepared for the purpose to proceed with their labor. The bottom of the canyon was almost perpendicular with the surface, and nothing save a projecting rock interrupted the descent. About two weeks ago his partner, Will Mason, got into the basket and was about to descend to the depths of the canyon. He had been preceded by the "stakeman," and he had made the trip below without any accident. The basket was governed by a windlass which was set solidly in the rocks above and supported by strong braces that rendered it impossible for it to give way, even under hundreds of pounds of weight. A long scantling that stood out from the surface with a roller adjusted at one end kept the basket of human freight from the rocks. Upon the morning mentioned the basket's pivotal support was being unwound slowly when suddenly the rope relaxed, and peering below, they discovered that it had caught tight in a crevice on the side of the mountain. Below sat Mason in the basket, looking up towards them in an appealing way. The windlass was turned with the full strength of those at the handle, but they were unable to loosen the rope. Below Mason was an intervening space of nearly seven hundred feet, and his position was a horribly perilous one. He clung with an unrelenting grasp to the rope that kept him out of the jaws of a fearful eternity, and did not observe that the sharp edges of the crags above were fast eating their way through the slender threads of the large rope, and consigning him slowly but surely to a fatal fall. While the men were working away above in an effort to free the rope from the strong grip of the crevice in which it had caught, the windlass suddenly lost all opposition and the men fell back. They could divine what had happened, and with a shudder they looked below. The basket had gone down, carrying with it poor Mason upon his errand of death. It was only a moment until the bottom of the canyon was reached, and Mason was changed to a mass of flesh and bones. The stakemen below saw it, and approaching the body found it inanimate. Then additional rope was promptly procured, so as to reach the bottom of the canyon below. It was lowered; the basket was attached by the stakemen, and the dead body of the unfortunate chainman was elevated to the surface. The mutilated form was strapped on to the back of a mule, and sent to the terminus of the road and thence to South Arkansas, accompanied by Burgess. They were then placed in a neat coffin and sent to the grieving parents at Wichita, Kansas. After Burgess had concluded his story, he heaved a sigh and exclaimed, "My God, what a fearful sight!"

The truth bears daylight, and therefore let it be known, that N. L. Rosenthal sells more goods and at lower figures and gives more honest satisfaction than any other house west of the Missouri River, and to keep up this reputation for square deal and good treatment, I beg to invite the public at large to call and examine my stock and prices before buying elsewhere. Remember,
